Katherine is a dual American-British national living in London with her Italian husband. She holds a degree in European Studies from Columbia University and has always had a strong interest in European history. With a penchant for dramatic flare and a passion for story telling, Katherine loves stories about strong female protagonists. She finds that UK royal history is the perfect source and writes a series of tour guides exploring English Castles and the women who lived in them called Castles and Countesses.

A waste, does not even qualify for light reading.
